

Client: Louis Latour
Source: Yahoo! UK and Ireland
View Online View Text PDE
Date: 28Mar2018
Reach: 1030766
Value: 27668

Search

Sign in

Tourists pick their own grapes at Chile wine harvest fest

AP EVA VERGARA
Associated Press 28 March 2018

In this March 24, 2018 photo, tourists visit Viu Manent vineyard by horsedrawn carriage in Colchagua, Chile. The tourists have paid for a hands-on experience at Chile's harvest, which draws thousands of visitors each year. (AP Photo/Esteban Felix)

VALLE DE COLCHAGUA, Chile (AP) — Dozens of tourists armed with sharp scissors and donning dusty gloves and aprons walk through rows of green vines, handpicking dark purple grapes that will be turned into Chilean wines enjoyed around the world.

It's hard work under a scorching sun and the professional pickers watching them from a distance grin knowingly. But the tourists have paid for the hands-on experience at Chile's harvest, which draws thousands of visitors each year, so they carefully cut the precious grapes in bunches and deposit them into wooden crates at the Viu Manent winery.

"The truth is that you always drink the wine, but you don't really know the process behind it," said Gina Cuesta, a visitor from Colombia.

Chile is the world's No. 9 wine producer, with an output of about 800 million liters last year. It was the world's fourthlargest exporter by volume, and the leader among "New World"

What could prevent you from retiring?

If you have a £250,000 portfolio download the guide for retirees written by money manager Ken Fisher's firm. It's called "The 15-Minute Retirement Plan." Even if you have something else in place right now, it still makes sense to request your guide.

Learn more here

FISHER INVESTMENTS UK*

What to read next

Richard Madeley is blasted by Good Morning Britain viewers for 'perky' comment on Lucy Verasamy's denim dress

Evening Standard

Client: Louis Latour
Source: Yahoo! UK and Ireland
View Online View Text
PDF

Date: 28Mar2018
Reach: 1030766
Value: 27668

producers.

The South American country has been making wine since the mid1500s, when Spanish settlers brought the first vines, and has become known for producing reliable and affordable wines.

Visitors pay up to $90 for the tour of Viu Manent, which includes riding on horsedrawn carriages or bikes in the pastures of the Colchagua Valley, one of Chile's bestknown wine regions.

And they get the grapepicking experience.

While the tourists don't get to keep the grapes, they top off their work with grilled steak, fermented grape juice and a glass of malbec at the vineyard's visitor center, which this year was named best in the world by the British magazine Drinks International. Founded in 1935, Viu Manent was also awarded Winery of the Year in 2017 by the Wines of Chile association.

"There are some vineyards that offer similar initiatives, but none is as complete and focused on the integral experience of wine producing and enology as ours," said Freddy Grez, who is in charge of Viu Manent's tourist activities.

Each year, about 37,000 visitors — most of them from Brazil and the United States — visit the winery about 90 miles (140 kilometers) south of the Chilean capital. The twohour drive from Santiago along the country's "Wine Trail" gives tourists the chance to winehop at guesthouses and restaurants that offer carmenere, cabernet sauvignon and other varieties for which Chile is known.

Chile's natural barriers have a lot to do with the successful growth of its wine industry. It is shielded by the Pacific Ocean on the west, the Andes mountains on the east, Antarctica to the south and the world's driest desert to the north. This has helped protect Chile from plagues, allowing winemakers to grow vines ungrafted, using ancient cultivation techniques.

In recent years, Chilean winemakers have also been experimenting with other temperatures and terrains. In the quest for more interesting tastes and characters, they've grown grapes in extreme places such as the icy south and the Atacama desert.

Back at Viu Manent, the team of tourists has gathered about 1,100 pounds (500 kilograms) of grapes. It seems like a lot but Grez says that depending on the harvest, professional workers can pick two to four times as much — anywhere from 2,000 pounds (900 kilograms) to 4,400 pounds (2,000 kilos) a day.

"I thought it was interesting because I put myself in the shoes of the people who do this work," lawyer Ana Maria Farren said. "We were here for half an hour and ended up tired. The (workers) are here for hours at a time. This experience allowed me to understand all the heavy work that is behind a bottle of wine."

Associated Press writer Luis Andres Henao in Buenos Aires, Argentina, contributed to this report.

The Dragons' Den Deal That Will Change The World

That Golden Rule Sponsored

Airbnb to start sharing Chinese host information with government

Business Insider UK

Side Before Self

Yahoo UK Presents

Pictures of the week: Bears, boats and bridges

Brilliant Way To Check If You Had PPI

Allay Sponsored

